Russia Is Cooler With E. Germans After Brandt Fall

By Hedrick Smith

MOSCOW, May 3 (NYT).—The Soviet leadership made a show solidarity with East Germany today in the wake of the toppling West German Chancellor Willy Brandt by a scandal involving an st Berlin spy. But there were signs that Moscow is not entirely opy with East Germany over the affair.

Prayda and other Soviet newspapers gave conspicuous front-page by to a message from the Soviet leaders to the East German leaders the 29th anniversary of the victory over the Nazis in World War II and ran articles aimed at showing that East-West German relations were not affected by

Four States Go to Polls

Glenn and Wallace Win Primaries

NEW YORK, May 8 (AP) .-Former astronaut John Glenn jr. won the Democratic nomination senator from Ohio on his third try, and Alabama Gov. George Wallace won nomination for an unprecedented third term in state primary elections yester-

Candidates for three Senate seats, two governorships and more than 50 House seats were chosen as Alabama, Ohio, Indiana and North Carolina held primaries for the November midterm elections. Voters in the District of Columbia, meanwhile, gave overwhelming approval to a charter that restores a measure of selfgovernment to the nation's capital for the first time in a century.

Mr. Glenn, 52, who 12 years ago became the first American to orbit the earth, showed surprising strength in Ohio's uroan areas to end the brief Senate tenure of Howard Metzenbaum, appointed last December when Republican William Saxbe resigned to become attorney general.

Symbol of Integrity

posed by organized and the state Democratic organization, Mr. Glenn projected himself as a symbol of integrity in the year of the Watergate scandal, while Sen. Metzenbaum suffered from the disclosure that he paid no federal income taxes Democratic National Chairman Robert Strauss declined in Washington to speculate on the impact of the financial-disclosure issue, saying Mr. Glenn won "a person-ality contest" and predicting that a united Democratic party will do well in Ohio this November.

"John Glenn is an extremely attractive man, a very nice man, Mr. Strauss told newsmen. Mr. Glenn will be favored in November against Republican Mayor Ralph Perk of Cleveland, an easy victor over Peter Voss of Canton. The former astronaut yesterday reversed the result of the 1970 Democratic primary, captured by Sen. Metzenbaum. The 56year-old attorney lost that year's general election to Republican

Sen. Robert Taft jr. The former space hero ran al-most even with Sen. Metzenbaum in the senator's home city of Cleveland and won Columbus and Dayton, which he lost in 1970. Sen, Metzenbaum won Cincinnati and Toledo by less than he needed to.

With 12,876, or 99 percent, of the state's 12,895 polling places tabulated the vote stood Glenn 570,045, Metzenbaum 475,939.

The nominations for governor in Ohio were won without difficulty by Democratic incumbent John Gilligan and Republican James Rhodes, his predecessor as governor

Though Gov. Gilligan suffered setback in the defeat of Sen. Metzenbaum, his appointee, the Gilligan choice for lieutenant governor, State Rep. Richard Celeste, won over eight opponents. If both Gov. Gillican and Mr. Coleste win in November, the way will be cleared for the governor to run for either schator or president in 1976.

Alabama Results

In Alabama, Gov. Wallace's renomination was never in doubt. With 2,753 of the 4,641 boxes tabulated, he had 338,272 votes to a total of 176.421 for his four opponents. The only one to attain a significant total was State Sen. Eugene McLain, who had contended Gov. Wallace was more interested in a 1976 presidential race than in Alabama.

In rolling up some 65 percent of the vote. Gov. Wallace, who for the first time had significant black support, carried several predominantly black counties he had lost in the past. He lost Macon County but more than coubled his post hereentage there. Gov. Wallace faces Republican (Continued on Page 3, Col. 2) men,

LONDON, May 8 (NYT) .- A nationwide strike by one of Britain's largest trade unions was settled today when a lawyer appeared in court and paid £65,000 (about $156,000) on behalf of an anonymous donor to cover fines and damages levied against the labor organization.

It was an extraordinary move. described by the judge of the court as a "novelty" but by some opposition Conservative party members as undermining the law. To some it seemed a characteristically British compromise by which a union could flout the law and get away with it: to others, industrial peace had been bought cheaply and legally. "The client for whom I appear takes no part and has nothing to say about the merits of the matters before you but is concerned solely with the disruption which has followed as a result of the last few hours," Brian Neill, the lawyer, told the National Industrial Relations Court.

The strike, involving 1.2 million members of the Amalgamated Union of Engineering Workers. was called yesterday after the court had seized all the union's funds for nonpayment of the levies. Automobile plants, shipyards, steel mills and most newspapers had already begun shulting desm.

We are happy to eistruct our nismbers to call off the industrial action forthwith and to resume normal working," union presi-dent Hugh Scanlon said.

He said he did not know who the donor was. "Quite frankly I don't desire and I don't believe anybody desires to know," he said. It appeared that all the union's members would be back at work no later than tomorrow. In Britain, "engineer" means almost anybody who works with machinery. Had the surke contimued, the consequences for the national economy might have been devastating, because engineers are vital in nearly all sectors of British industry. Speculation immediately arose that the government itself had been the source of the funds because of the political impact of a disruptive shutdown just as the British economy was recovering from the three-day work week imposed last winter as a fuelsaving measure. An unconfirmed report circulated that Prime Minister Harold Wilson had been indirectly involved in an arrangement for an adonymous group of industrialists to put up the money. Mr. Wilson was said to have been informed of the effort last week, but 10 Downing Street declined any comment. The Wilson administration already has introduced legislation in Parliament to repeal the Industrial Relations Act, under which the court had been creatboth cash and securities, had been sequestered by the court because of the union's refusal to pay fines and damages levied against it after a strike seven months ago at Con-Mech (Engineering: Ltd., a small plant outside London, was ruled illegal, Mr. Neill on Monday had made a similar offer for his client's payment of the levies on the union, but the court rejected it, contending that payment of the levies by a third party would not resolve the legal issues in the dispule.

Sir John Donaldson, president of the court, today was careful to stipulate that the acceptance should not in any way be considered a surrender of authority. He did not comment on the status of a contempt judgment against the union.

Bonn Approves Envoy Appointed By East Germany

BONN May 8 (Reuters) - West step toward normalizing relations with East Germany on the day Chancellor Willy Brandt quit over the East German spy scandal, it was stated here yesterday. A West German government spokesman said Bonn had accepted the appointment of Michael Kohl as Eost German: - first permanent representative here.

The exchange of permanent enof an East German agent in Mr. Brandt's immediate enfourage last week, is a major follow-up to the "good neighbor" accord that Bonn and East Berlin signed in December, 1972.

Mr. Kohl was chief East German negotiator of this pact, which envisages the establishment of permanent missions— virtual embassies—in Bonn and East Berlin.

Because of the so: scandal, West Germany last veck canceled talks with East Germany on the appointment of a West German representative.

-paints a bizarre picture. In the interest of national security—we have as much from the former chancellor's own lips -the elected leader of Europe's most influential country was recruited by his own agents to string along a suspected spy-to keep him in play, and Mr. Brandt

From then on, Mr. Brandt became an agent provocateur, in the sense that he was pretending to keep open his heart to Mr. Guillaume and thus encouraging him in further criminal acts. The office of chancellor, in the jargon of the trade, became a cover job, in the sense that the chancellor's work, where it came within Mr. Guillaume's observation, was subject to operational require-

It is also clear that until Mr. Brandt knew that Mr. Guillaume was under suspicion, Mr. Brandt trusted him. Conceivably he trusted him after these suspicions were reported to him: Mr. Brandt was elected chancellor for his heart as well as his head. He is the natural enemy of secret, bureaucratic persecution just as he is the natural enemy of deceit.

Half Nightmare

But it is unfortunately this very human loyalty, precisely this big-heartedness, that weighs so heavily in the construction of that half-nightmare in the back of my mind. I am trying to imagine, you see, the crippling strain of this extra burden of duplicity upon a chancellor already fully engaged in resolving the crucia issues of his career. And I am trying to guess by what authority it was imposed on him. I am trying to understand the meaning of "national security" in the con-text of this case. Was it for two months that he bore the strain. or ten? When did Mr. Brandt know how much?

That he was disgusted, we know. Eis disgust was manufest in his statement to the Bundestag -a very natural reaction in a man who had been deeply decei:ed by a trusted, favored colleague, and who deceived him deeply in return. Nor is it too fanciful to suggest that Mr. Brandt's disgust was in part directed against himself.

There are many strange sideeffects that attend a long period of duplicity, and the history of that trade suggests that not even Mr. Brandt's present position the toughest are immune. Sometimes. I understand, a dependence the chancellor's retreat and Bonn. Exactly what Mr. Brandt was alluding to in his private life reference was not clear. However. Mr. Brandt, like many figures in German public life, may have committed indiscretions and detailed knowledge of some of these may have figured somehow in Mr.

Guillaume's case. Some of Mr. Brandt's party friends charge that the security services passed this information along to the leaders of the conservative Christian Democratic opposition. Those leaders denied today, through a spokesman, that they were leading a "campaign of persecution" against the former chancellor.

A Look at the Chancellor Who Agreed to Play Counterspy develops upon the person one had some two decades of field service to his credit.

It is a situation one would hesitate to wish on any novice, even one who had no other commitments or worries, whereas Mr. Brandt had both. Was it for two months that he lived like this? Or ten?

Seen in this light, his resignation only compounds the mystery. If he was warned ten months ago, and declined to heed the warning, then his resignation and his role as an agent over the last two months may be seen as acts of expiation for sins of omission: "I ignored the warning. I will pay the price," he may have thought.

By David Binder

WASHINGTON, May 8 (NYT).
"I asked him for his friendship and he refused," Helmut Schmidt said last year of Willy Brandt, recalling an encounter more than 15 years ago at a Social Democratic party convention.

The incident illuminated the difference between the two German leaders. "For Brandt, with his Scandinavian experience, friendship is something that grows naturally and doesn't require any formal declarations." a diplomat once observed. "For Schmidt, with his purely German background, s sometiume that to be sealed with a bond." Although both Mr. Brandt and Mr. Schmidt like to talk publicly of one colleague or another as mein Freund, neither is rich in private friendships: Mr. Brandt because of profound reserve, Mr. Schmidt because of pugnacity.

Yet in spite of their disparities in political style, the two men managed to work closely in and out of government for almost two decades.

At the age of 55, Mr. Schmidt has proved himself as the Social Democratic parliamentary floor leader from 1967 to 1969, defense minister from 1969 to 1972 and since then as finance minister. He is a versatile politician whose diligence—usually involving an 18-hour day-determination and willingness to take expert advice have enabled him to perform credibly in a wide variety

Germany, he was "exuding confidence about the future of West Europe, West Germany, the Westalliance and Helmut Schmidt," as a German participant said in a background briefing.

Mr. Schmidt was born Dec. 23, 1918, in a Hamburg working-class district called Barmbek. His father was a teacher. Barmbek was an area dominated by the dockworker toughs of Ernst Thaimann's German Communist party and was the scene of many bloody strikes. Mr. Schmidt attended the progressive Lichtwark high school shere he met his future wife, Hannelore [Loki] Glaser, the daughter of a Communist. For all the proletarian surroundings, the Schmidts were anti-Communist and he was enrolled in the Hitler Youth, the Reich Labor

Service and finally in Wehrmacht.

Battle of the Bulge. World War II found him in an anti-aircraft artillery battalion. He served on the Russian front and toward the end of the war in the Battle of the Bulge on the Western front. He was decorated with an Iron Cross. The British took him prisoner at the end of the war. It was more or less natural for Mr. Schmidt to join the Social Democratic party in Hamburg, a city ruled by the Social Democrats almost without interruption since the war. He became the first national chairman of the Socialist Students League in 1947, time when the party still held to Marxist tenets. Mr. Schmidt's latter-day conservatism is taken ill by young West German student radicals who feel he has abandoned the convictions of his youth. But he is very much his own man in a country where mentordisciple relationships are still plentiful and hierarchical thinking has not vanished.

Mr. Schmidt joined the newly formed Bundeswehr (federal army) as a reserve officer in 1957 when Social Democrats were still inveighing against the rearming of Germany, and he has never exercised restraint in criticizing what he considered to be the excesses of West Germany's radical left. His outspoken manner-he is not afraid to correct an American's English or a German's German—won him the nickname Schmidt-Schnauze (Schmidt the in) when he became a Bundestag deputy in 1953.

Under No Pressure Under these circumstances, Mr. Ford speculated, the Russians may conclude they are under no pressure to give ground to the United States.

The White House, however, promptly rejected the implication that Watergate has weakened Mr. Nixon's ability to negotiate with the Soviet Union.

While saying that his remarks were not directed at the Vice-President, Deputy Press Secretary Gerald Warren told newsmen. "So that there is no misunderstanding the President never approaches any negotiation from a position of weakness, and he will not approach this summit planned for June in Moscow from a position of weakness."

This was the first time the Vice-President had talked so openly about his trepidations over the difficulties facing Mr. Nixon. The Vice-President initiated the conversation, coming forward from his private compartment to the section of the plane where reporters were seated. His man-ner was relaxed; he had his jacket off.

Because of the informal atmosphere, the five journalists, representing the Los Angeles Times the three commercial television networks and the Voice of America, did not take notes during the 30-minute chat. When the plane landed at Andrews Air Force Base near here, they reconstructed the conversation from memory and agreed to omit from their stories comments which the Vice-President had labeled off the record.

Ford Surprised

But Mr. Ford and his staff were evidently taken by surprise when they learned yesterday afternoon that stories based on the plane conversation would be published and broadcast, Mr. Ford then issued a brief

"... In the present Watergate climate, any votes by the Congress to cripple the defense budget or commitments to our allies make it more difficult for the President to negotiate for peace." the statement said. The criticism group named no names, but said the offenders were "the most decadent and reactionary social force." It said they were the "social founds-tion" of the late Defense Minister Lin Piac's alleged plot against the life of Chairman Mao Tse-tung in 1971.

The tone of the article sugges ed that the anti-Lin Piao, anti-Confucius campaign is moving toward a showdown against specific individuals in the Chinese cultural and educational establishment.

It said that Lin Piao, Mr Mao's onetime heir-designate and the loudest pro-Mao voice in the 1966-69 Cultural Revolution, in fact opposed the cultural purge

It added that "a handful of present-day devotees of Confucius who have extreme hatred for social change and progress" continues to attack the Cultural Revolution and its objectives. Five Categories

'Remedies' for Eclipse Perils Described by Primitive Tribes

NEW YORK, May 8 (NYT).-Pollowing what may have been the last opportunity to observe the reactions of primitive peoples to a solar eclipse, four teams of French scientists have described in detail such behavior within isolated tribes in South America and Africa. part of Australia.

They found striking similarity for an eclipse on opposite sides of the Atlantic: banging on every hollow object within reach and daubing the body with white clay. In one tribe, the medicine man chewed aloe leaves and spat them at all those near him to counter the effects of the eclipse. Scientists Accused

Elsewhere along the path the inhabitants, having heard that scientists were there to conduct eclipse "experiments" claimed that the scientists were placing an awning in front of the win before carrying it off.

The observations were organized by the Laboratory of Ethnology and Comparative Sociology of the University of Paris for the unusually long eclipse of last June 30. A summary of the findings was issued last month, and a more detailed report has now been received here.

Preparations, meanwhile, are being made by astronomers for observation of the next total eclipse of the sun on June 20. The moon's shadow will sweep across the southwest corner of Australia and over Amsterdam Island in the Indian Oc 7. Otherwise, the path will be at Last year's eclipse began over northwestern South America, and a team was on hand at a village in Surinam. The traditionconception of an there, according to the ath-nologists' report, "involves a battle between the sun and the moon, who are brothers [the eldest being the sun].

"The outcome, if the sun does not win out, could be perpetual night," the report said. "To separate the combatants, the elders told us, one must make the most noise possible, beating on everything that is hollow and sonorous. Furthermore, after the eclipse one must undertake a cleansing rite to rid the humans of blood that fell on them from the wounded moon." Radio announcements had warned of the coming eclipse. At first, when it took place, nothing unusual was done. An old man complained that, even at the last eclipse, it had been hard to get the younger generation to beng pots and pans suitably

Then, one or two hours after totality, when the sun had regained its brilliance, the French saw an old woman are thing a group of children with a palm leaf covered with kaolin, a white

Other old women joined in, and soon the entire village was white. Then the villagers entered a nearby river, washing off the clay and, according to the rite, the blood of the moon.

Another team joined a group of Islamic nomads in drought-stricken region of Niger, in the central Sahara. The men were away seeking food. The women said in advance of 'he eplipse that it would be an evil omen devised by God to punish the wicked.

As the eclipse became total, the women, who had been drawing water from a well, became transfixed. One moved away and knelt, with her veil over her head. She became "possessed by the spirits" and agitated by convult"e move-

In Milan, the principal art is the art of doing business. Naturally, Continental Bank is there.

The arts flourishing in Italy's major cities have been perfected over the ages. There is the fine glass of Venice. The beautiful and elegant marble of Rome.

The leather artistry of Florence.

But in Milan, additional skills have been practiced and perfected. The skills of industrial technology. The skills of steel making, automobile building and chemical processing.

And the skills of making money work.

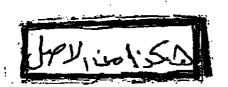

So today, Milan is Italy's most important industrial and financial center. Moreover, money market and foreign exchange activities are almost exclusively centered in Milan, as is Italy's major stock exchange.

But while Milan has a firm hold on Italian business, it is no less attractive to foreign interests. Of the 700 American companies holding investments in Italy, nearly 400 are in Milan. And of European firms with Italian subsidiaries, 41 per cent are there.

Of course, Continental is there, too. At Via Monte Napoleone 27.

Our full-service branch in Milan is an important link in Continental's growing six-continent banking network. A network which allows us to meet the needs of multinational corporations everywhere. And to meet them with dispatch, efficiency and flexibility you might not expect from a bank as large as Continental.

Central Reforms When Kemal Ataturk founded the modern republic in 1923, one of his central reforms was to destroy the political power wielded for centuries by Moslem leaders under the Ottoman Empire. He even banned all political appeals based on religious themes.

For the last 25 years, Turkish politics has been dominated by a broad conservative coalition. But that alliance has now splintered, and for the elections last fall. Mr. Erbakan, an engineer by training, formed a new faction, the National Salvation party.

Rome Paper Struck in Move Linked to Divorce Referendum

today struck Il Messaggero, Rome's largest daily, claiming that the newspaper had been sold in order to soften its firm prodivorce position. Italians will vote Sunday and Monday in a referendum over repeat of the divorce law.

Messaggero journalists, who are known to hold lett-of-center views, said that industrialists aligned with the Christian Democratic party had purchased 50 percent of the newspaper's shares from Alessandro Perronc, executive editor of the daily. The other 50 percent was sold to a conservative Milan magazme publisher last year.

Mr. Perrone denied that he had sold his half interest in the newspaper, and said. "No sale would be concluded without a full guarantee to safeguard the [paper's | deniocratic and anti-Fascist editorial policies."

The statements by both Mr. Perrone and the journalists were carried on Messaggero's front

A committee of Messaggero journalists charged that Amintore Faniani, sceretary-general of the Catholic Church - backed Christian Democratic party, was behind the purchase. It said that Mr. Fanfani acted through mdustrialists who include Edilio Rusconi, the Milan publisher who previously bought the other 50 of the newspaper's

Truth and the Presidency

"Good evening. I want to talk to you tonight from my heart. . . . " Thus the President of the United States, on April 30 of hast year, alerted the American people that he was about to level with them on Watergate, going on to speak of how the office he held was, in his view, "a sacred trust" and one of which he was "determined to be worthy." It was a very moving affair, and it also was as we now know-fake. Evidently a lot of people think that reading the edited transcripts of presidential conversations of that period, which were made public by the White House last week, represents the ultimate experience in disillusionment and disgust. But we can go them one better -or perhaps we should say one worse. If you have a masochistic streak and a hardy constitution, we recommend that you read those transcripts of private conversations against the concurrent public statements the President was making—and continues to make-to you. The only word that comes to mind is one that is usually "deleted" or "unintelligible" where presidents are concerned, or at the very least "inaudible." It is lies—systematically, willfully and repeatedly told by the President of the United

We are aware that it is in the age-old tradition of politics to exaggerate and to put the brightest possible construction on the most dismal and damaging of events. But Mr. Nixon's stark misstatement of facts with which he was wholly familiar is in another order of things, and it persists. What is so odd about the public response to this phenomenon is that Americans' preoccupation with their new-found legal and constitutional lore has all but blinded them to the implications of what Mr. Nixon has done. After all—one can presumably argue -he wasn't under oath in all those television addresses "from the heart," so how is that either an indictable crime or an impeachable offense? Indeed, the United States as a whole has become so immersed in these aspects of the degradation of the presidency that somehow it is considered "all right" for Mr. Nixon to take to the airwaves, stare the nation in the eye, invoke the sacred trust of the highest office in the land-and then say things he knows to be utterly false.

How many times has Mr. Nixon told you now that on March 21 of 1973, upon learning for the first time of the involvement of members of his administration in the Watergate burglary and cover-up, he ordered the bearer of the news, John Dean, to prepare him a written report of the facts and that John Dean never did so? It was, he informed us last May 22, a key part of "an intensive effort of my own to get the facts and to get the facts out." Well, as the transcripts of the period show. March 21 was not the first time Mr. Nixon learned of his aides' involvement, and the subsequent efforts he made could hardly be called factfinding missions. The so-called Dean Report, as planned and discussed by the President and Dean and Haldeman, Ehrlichman and Mitchell, was to be a cooked up, incomplete document which the participants in the meeting all but wrote in advance of Dean's sojourn in Camp David. As the ineffable Mr. Ehrlichman put it at one of these planning sessions, "You have to bottom your defense, your position on the report. And the report says nobody was involved, and you have to stay consistent with that." How did he know what the unwritten report would say?

In fact, the transcripts of the period suggest that anything but an "intensive effort" to "get the facts and get the facts out" was under way. "What the hell does one disclose that isn't going to blow something," Mr. Nixon asks at one point, and the substance of his remarks has mainly to do with cover-up and what is called "damage limitation" in the world of arms control. He and his colleagues move easily and habitually back and forth between the hard practical language involved in figuring out who will be thrown over the side to save the others and the weird parody language of the public statements they will subsequently make.

Ehrlichman: And I am looking to the future, assuming that some corner of this thing comes unstuck, you are then in a position to say, "Look, that document I published [the so-called 'Dean Report'] is the document I relied on, that is, the report I relied on."

President: This is all we knew.

Haldeman: That is all the stuff we could find out-

Ehrlichman: And now this new development is a surprise to me—I am going to fire A. B, C, and D, now.

And again:

Ehrlichman: You could say this. You could say I have never had a communication with anybody on my staff about this burglary-

President: Therefore-

Ehrlichman: Or about Segretti, prior

President: Segretti, Segretti is not in this court so that is no problem.

Ehrlichman: Well-then alright-President: I had never had any-

Ehrlichman: Since I had no communication with anybody on the White House staff about this burglary or about the circumstances leading up to it, there is no occasion for executive privilege in this President: With regard to this, I want you to get to the bottom of it. So there will be no executive privilege on that. On other matters...

Haldeman: And that takes you up to the June 17th. What do you do after June 17th?

President: Use the executive privilege

These were not truth-seeking sessions or anything remotely like them. They were coaching classes. They were script writing sessions. They were dress rehearsals for further deception.

Speaking of his March 21, 1973, conversation with Dean, the President last August solemnly informed the public that Dean on that occasion had told him that:

"Funds had been raised for payments to the defendants, with the knowledge and approval of persons both on the White House staff and at the re-election committee. But I was only told that the money had been used for attorneys' fees and family support, not that it had been paid to procure silence from the recip-

Early this March, however, when the tape of that conversation seemed likely to become public, the President, equally solemnly informed the people of the reverse. On that same day and in that same conversation, he now said. Dean "told me that payments had been made to the defendants for the purpose of keeping them quiet, not simply for their defense." Questioned about this revelation a short while later, the President explained that what Dean had really done was to "allege" that hush money payments had been made, so that the President could hardly be sure enough of the allegation to refer it to the Justice Department. But now, as the transcripts tell us, Mr. Nixon did not receive the information as an "allegation" at all: He accepted it as a fact and repeatedly suggested that Dean had better make sure the next installment got out on time to keep the menacing Howard Hunt quiet.

There are throughout these transcripts. even in their edited incompleteness, endless examples of this sort of presidential duplicity in dealing with the public, and his very description of what they sa, now that they have been published continues to vary sharply from the evidence of our eyes. How are we to account for this? What depths of cynicism must a public man draw on to be able to issue printed material and simultaneously to say it contains something it does not? Maybe Mr. Nixon himself believes that anything not said under oath, anything that does not qualify technically as an indictable crime or an impeachable offense in the narrowest construction of that phrase, carbe perpetrated by him with impunity. Maybe he thinks the public is too dumb to rotice or too insensitive to care or too trusting of a man who holds the office he holds to question his public utterances - especially when he looks us in the eye and says, in effect, Trust me-I am your President.

It is that trust-that reservoir of respect for the office and that unwillingness to believe that a President would systematically deceive-that Mr. Nixon has so exploited and abused. He continues to do so. As a consequence, whatever his personal political (ate turns out to be in the next several months. we will be picking up the wreckage of the American presidency for years to come.

PARIS-With the publication at Pretoria of correspondence between the British Colonial Secretary and the government of the Transvaal Republic, the crisis in the South African Republic may be regarded as having reached its acute stage. It must be confessed that this publication, which looks as if it had been sprung upon the British government, is not in keeping with diplomatic usage, which requires that no correspondence should be published by one party without the consent of the other.

NEW YORK.—There is increasing concern about the role of multinational corporations in the world economy, and particularly about their influence on the national economic, social, and cultural fabric of the countries in which they operate.

National governments are considering how best to "control" the large multinational enterprises and many countries have introduced a variety of restrictions governing these companies' activities. At the international level. a major UN study of the broad impact of multinational corporations on economic development and international relations is underway.

A number of businessmen, academicians, and labor leaders from the United States, Western Europe and developing nations have presented their views to the UN "Group of Eminent Persons" appointed to study the multinational corporation and recommend appropriate policy actions. The Organization for Economic Development and Cooperation. whose membership consists of industrialized countries only, has also embarked on a broad-scale study of the multinational corporation. The Business and Industry Advisory Committee (BIAC) to the OECD representing the business community from OECD countries, is in touch with OECD concerning the various aspects of the study. BLAC will cooperate with OECD as this study progresses, by providing its advice and assistance, where appropriate.

Responsibility

A major aspect in assessing the behavior of multinational corporations is how they view their responsibilies to society. Generally, multinational corporations see their most important responsibility as conducting their particular business well-by producing a high-quality product or service efficiently and offering it at a reasonable price. A second level of responsibility is to ensure that the indirect impact of business operations is consistent with national goals-for example, with respect to protecting the physical environment, reducing social inequities, and improving labor skills. A third level of responsibility concerns efforts to enhance the broader social environment in countries in which the corporation has operations, for example, by providing support for programs in health and education, community development, and national cultural activities. Multinational corporations generally accept these three levels of responsibility not simply because it is "the right thing to do." but to a great extent because such behavior promotes successful long-term operations in foreign host countries.

Since no multinational corporation has unlimited resources. it must choose carefully among the many investment opportunitles which arise. In making longterm investments abroad, multinational corporations are vitally concerned that the basic "rules of the game" affecting these investments will remain relatively stable, or at least predictable, Although conflicts with governments have not been common, the potential for conflicts in the goals of multinational corporations and governments is z. cause for serious concern, particularly among host countries. This concern reflects a number of factors. For example, the large size of many multinational corporations has been cited as evidence of power over national economies. However, most of the wealth of multinational corporations consists of fixed assets, which cannot be summoned to bring pressure to bear on either individual currencies or governments.

The many examples of unilateral government actions-imposed production and export quotas, price controls, enforced sell-outs, and in some cases expropriations-and the accommodations made by multinational corporations, do not indicate that global size entails substantial power. The success of multingtional corporations in operating in many countries over long periods largely reflects their ability to adapt to-not escape from the national requirements and goals of individual hast countries, while continuing to come on elfective business operations.

There are a number of positive actions which both corporations and governments could take to reduce, if not eliminate, potential sources of conflict. First, to the extent that tax policies may distort international investment de-

On the other hand, multinational corporations would be significantly encouraged to undertake new investments in developing nations if they had a greater assurance that their operations in these countries would not be subjected to substantial new forms of discrimination or controls once their facil-

Thus, a measure of international agreement on some maximum extent of discrimination or restrictions affecting foreign inrestment in various policy areas -such as taxation and foreign exchange remittance policies, for example—could substantially reduce the investment risks perceived by multinational corporations. An intergovernmental agreement could also include a broad commitment by nost governments to submit foreign investment disputes to the international conciliation and arbitration facilities of the World Bank or ICC. Exit Willy Brandt

A Touch of Class

By James Reston

WASHINGTON. - The political keep the American troops in West instability of the free world is getting a little scary. In recent days and weeks, President Pompldou of France has died, Prime Minister Heath of Britain has been defeated, and now Chancellor Willy Brandt of West Germany has resigned. The loss of Brandt, even if it is only temporary, is particularly sad. Brandt is what we call in America a "classy guy." That is to say, he was not merely a manager or a technician of politics, but a leader in the oldfashioned sense, tough and tender, but with a sense of humor and a sense of history. He may be the best political leader we have in the Western world, and it's too bad to see him quit, but it's not surprising.

"Class," in American slang, means style of manner or conduct. Hemingway thought of it as some-thing deeper than that, a way of behaving well in difficult circumstances, a kind of inner courage, or as he called it, "grace under pressure." This was the way Brandt looked from the outside. Maybe he fooled us. Inside, nobody knows, least of all reporters, for we see politicians only when they are on display or on guard. But Willy, even if he is being wily and retreating only to advance, at least took his chances and risked his job in order to save his honor.

Found a Spy

They found a spy from Communist East Germany in Brandt's office. The facts were not in dispute. The spy was a trusted aide to the chancellor and admitted his loyalty to the Commu-nists. Brandt didn't hire him and the West German counterespionage officials didn't expose him, but Brandt took responsibility for the offense. He didn't know what was going on, he said, but he should have known, so he resigned.

It is interesting to compare Brandt's reaction to scandal and President Nixon's. And also to compare the parliamentary system of democracy in Europe with the presidential system of democracy in the United States. Brandt and Nixon both said that they had to take "responsibility" for the scandals in their administrations, but Brandt felt that if he was "responsible" he had to get out, and leave the issue to the people, while Nixon felt he had to stay on.
But this is much more than 2 question of style and manner. Brandt was a key figure in the politics of the world. He fought for the unity of Western Europe, partnership with the United States and compromise with Moscow and Communist East Europe. It was a difficult, almost an impossible challenge, but somehow he managed to keep the American troops in West Germany, while reconciling the old German conflict with Russia, and balancing the political forces at home.

When France argued against Henry Kissinger's offer of an Atlantic "partnership" with the United States, it was Brandt who alliance" and got the funds to power before too long.

Likewise, it was Brandt who insisted that West Germany must come to terms with the Soviet Union, Communist East Germany, and the Communist states of Eastern Europe. He also made his peace with Secretary of State Kissinger who didn't like the West German "opening" to the East but who came to believe in Branct and urged him to go to Cairo and help resolve the savage conflicts of the Middle East. So the West is weaker now without Brandt, and in some ways without Heath in Britain. Heath was for the unification of Europe, and his successor, Harold Wilson. is not so sure.

All this leaves the free world in a state of political instability. The President of the United States is facing the possibility of impeachment. The prime minister of Britain is trying to govern without a majority in the House of Commons. France has broken the Gaullist tradition and is staggering now between a government of the right and the left. Portugal has thrown off 50 years of dictatorship and in a revolutionary situation with the Communists emerging as the strongest party. Spain is waiting for the death of Generalissimo Francisco Franco, now 82, with his wife, his daughter. and his granddaughter said to be exercising critical political influence in Madrid. Elsewhere in Europe, minerity governments are trying to maintain control, except in Greece where the generals are in charge, and of course Italy is trying to prove that governments are not. really necessary.

Willy Brandt understood all this and used his philosophy and his eloquence to try to hold the West together, to unify Europe, compromise with Moscow, and retain the Atlantic partnership with the United States.

Yet he felt he had to resign when he was compromised at home. He was "responsible," he said, for his staff and they let him down, so he got out and but the decision to his parliament and the people.

A New Coach

The parliamentary system of political responsibility in Canada and Europe is the same as the baseball, foo-ball, or basketball system of responsibility in the United States. If the team loses and winds up in trouble or in the cellar, you get a new coach or a president or a prime minister. You deal with the facts. You don't ask whether the leader is a nice guy, with a long contract and a pleasant wife. Or whether he wanted to win but lost. You get yourself a new leader maybe worse than the old one, but you make a new beginning.

This is what Willy Brandt has done. He got in trouble, so he got out. It is a hard rule, but not too bed. He put his honor shead of his job, which is what is meant by "class." And the guess insisted on maintaining the "old here is that he will be back in

Fantasy From the White House

By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak

WASHINGTON—Suspicions that the Nixon White House is dangerously out of touch with reality in its handling of the impeachment issue reached a new high just before the President's April 29 televised address announcing the release of an edited transcript of 46 taped White House Watergate-related conversations

In an elaborate presentation in the Cabinet Room, undisclosed until now, Gen. Alexander Haig, the White House chief of staff, played a segment from one of the tapes to astonished members of the Nixon cabinet.

"It was a fantastic meeting," one official told us. Haig said that release of the 1,308-page transcript would finally prove the President's innocence in any Watergate cover-up role. Then, after a thumbnall description of what Mr. Nixon would tell the nation half an hour later in his televised address, Haig flicked the playback switch on a White House tape machine, turned up the volume and let the tape run for two minutes. He did not identify the tape.

Secretary of the Treasury George Shultz, nearing his last day in office, sat stony-faced, arms across his chest, while the Nixon cabinet was treated to what one called "a series of unintelligible screeching noises."
Haig explained that the tape in question had been "prepared" by White House technicians for maximum audibility, then said that anyone could understand why White House secretaries been climbing the around here" transcribing the Around the table there was stunned silence. One cabinet member whispered a question about the release of the tapes: "Why didn't they do this months ago?" But Haig himself was asked no leading questions. After switching off the tape, Raig told each cabinet member to make up your own mind" about the President's innocence and if they agreed he was innocent to get out around the country and make the President's case.

That cabinet meeting, with the President himself not there, marked only the second time the cabinet has been briefed in advance of a Nixon Watergate statement. The first was April 30, last year, just before Mr. Nixon fired H.R. Haldeman, John Ehrlichman and John Dean 3d.

On that earlier occasion Mr. Nixon's desperate hope that he had reversed the Watergate tide proved disastrously wrong. Yet the experience of one failure after another to get out from under Watergate seems to have made only slight impact on Richard Nixon's sense of reality. Thus, when he flew west to Arizona and Washington State last Friday, the President was described by Republican politicians who accompanied him as "euphoric" from the impact of his April 29 speech and the release of the Watergate transcripts. Mr. Nixon talked animatedly about the fall campaign and how much he wanted to get around the country to help Republican

"He must not be reading the newspapers," a leading Nixon supporter in Congress said later. This appearance inside the White House of being out of touch with reality, moreover, led to major confusion about the President's decision on the release of new Watergate tapes to special Watergate prosecutor Leon Jaworski. In separate television panel shows on Sunday, both Haig and James St. Clair, Mr. Nizon's Watergate lawyer, proclaimed no more Watergate tapes would be turned over either to Jaworski or to the House Judiclary Committee candidates.

Then on Monday, St. Clair's request for a postponement of court action on Jaworski's subpoens for 64 more Watergate-related tapes convinced the prosecutor's office that a deal was in the works.

Granting the postponement federal Judge John J. Sirica said its purpose was to give St. Clair more time to arrange "possible compliance" with Jaworski's subpoena. The apparent reason: St Clair had concluded that public and political pressure to but over the 64 new tapes, all involving conversations on the mair Watergate case from June 20 1972, to June 4, 1973, would b irresistible.

But one day later, St. Clai made another astounding reversa :.. reiterating the original Whit House rigidity on no more Water gate tapes for Jaworski or th House Judiciary Committee. The reversal restores and strengthen the White House hard line an is certain to line up many not most Republicans on th Judiciary Committee behind a ner House subpoens. It also appear to assure a historic court tes which, unlike the similar con frontation last fall when Mr. NI3 on backed down, could lead constitutional crisis. In short, the extraordinar tape playback for Mr. Nixon; cabinet, designed to mark he emergence to high ground, we only one more ominous shadow the unreality pervading his prei idency. It marked a new high

What exactly does he cast out? Is it an entity, a demon with a recognizable individuality—part of his technique is to call out spirits by name or something less particularized? "Some people I treat see demons," he says, "But the force behind such manifestations is more important than the way it. is perceived. I prefer to talk of an evil force rather than a spirit."

Within the Church of England Mr. Neil-Smith is a controversial figure, attacked by other priestly exorcists for the ease with which he agrees to grapple with the forces of evil, and also at odds with the recent joint Anglican and Roman Catholic report on exorcism that doubted the whole concept of possession and recommended that a person should be as carefully prepared for exorcism as baptism.

"The exorcism report put everything within the framework of the church," Mr. Neil-Smith complains "But most people who come to me are not within the church or even within Christian civilization Tye expressed Hindus and Moslems and Buddhists and all sorts of people, from Hampstead intellectuals to Heil's AnGospel," he insists, guided by St. Mark's account of Jesus casting out the unclean spirit that then possessed the Gadarene swine, The Catholic reliance on the Rituale Romanum, specifying the evidence of possession—speaking in strange tongues, unnatural strength—he finds inadequate Psychiatrists have shown that people with such symptoms need

His Stand

Dismissing his critics-"they show jealousy and ignorance"—he takes his stand alongside that present revival of ancient Christian ways, the charismatic movement, "I have the charismatic gift, of discernment of spirits," he says, "I can pick up evil viorations from people, through my head or my hands, I know at once if they need the attentions of an exorcist or a doctor. Some, like an escaped, suicidal mental patient who turned up on my doorstep, require immediate exorcism, as Jesus gave."

The overwhelming interest in exorcism is due to a growing spiritual awareness, he feels, There is a great human need at the moment. Diabolical cvil has come out into the open," But the success of his book remains surprising-70 pence is a high price to pay for 127 pages of disjointed

...The Exorcist Has Office Hours and a Working Relationship With the Devil

By John Vinocur

DARIS (AP) -The Paris exorcist has office hours. And a beize waiting room, and a carpeted consultation nook, and a working relationship with the devil.

Encased in glass and steel and two floors down from the headquarters of the Archbishop of Paris, François Cardinal Marty, is a world of spells and demons.

The possessed begin lining up at 8 a.m. on Wednesdays waiting for the Rev. Henri Gesland, 66, to arrive at the antiseptically modern building of the Paris Roman Catholic Archdiocese. A small, gnomish man with a white rim of beard along his chin, Father Gesland slips behind his chair and begins a day of listening. He is the church's official exorcist for the Paris region, but as far as he is concerned the devil is a rare visitor in the streets behind the Elysée Palace.

"Since my appointment in 1968, sultations," the priest said. "There have been four cases of what I believe to be demonic possession."

Longer Lines

In a normal day of devil chasing. Father Gesland sees up to 25 visitors who wait patiently for their turn, some wrestling with their internal anguish, others relaxed enough to read the race track form sheets or a woman's weekly. Recently, with the success of the film "The Exorcist." Father Gesland's waiting lines have grown.

"It's pretty much the same Father Gesland explains. thing," "I let them talk. And I listen. A large proportion of my visitors think someone has placed a spell on them. I have a number of people from the West Indies and from Portugal and sorcerers are a part of their lives. If someone tells a simple person that there's a spell on him, he can be traumatized. There are others who find that life is treating them so badly, that they are so short of Father Gesland has been doing the exorcist's job since 1968. He had no special training for it, but after returning from 30 years in Ceylon as a missionary he assisted another priest in helping a woman who thought she was afflicted by devils. When the exorcist in charge resigned, the diocese called on Father Gesland.

"The choice," according to the Rev. Roger Meuillet, of the diocesan headquarters, "was dictated by Father Gesland's personality, more than any other factor. He is an understanding man, a patient man, who can listen and calm people.'

Four Cases

But for all the "zocos"-the priest's expression for jokerathat he sees, there have been the luck, that there must be some four cases where he did recite ine profits the cheapest part of the product.

The least costly part of what you pay for a product is generally the maker s profit.

Why?

Because through that profit, which averages out to far less than most people think, you hire a person who watches the maker's costs of doing business.

How so?

Since competition and supply and demand dictate prices, a businessman often finds the only way he can improve his profit margin—or earn any profit at all—is by reducing his costs to the minimum. This is the area he has the most control over, and one he must control to make a profit.

It is profit that brings out supply. Any indication that profits are abnormally high tends to attract substantial new production capacity. This, of course, increases the supply. That, in turn, tends to lower the price.

Is the system infallible? Does it always work exactly that way? Certainly not. But that's the basic thrust of the system, which is still the best mankind has been able to devise to serve the greatest good of the greatest number.

The beauty of the free-market system is its capacity for ceaseless change as it adapts to a changing world without destroying its own basic dynamic in the process. All that's needed to introduce immediate malfunctions is a body of regulations imposed from without.

This is not to argue for 19th-century laissez-taire. On the contrary. Our world is too complex. too interdependent, too fragile if you will, for that. What we are saying comes down to this: Many government social programs (Social Security and Medicare, to name only two) are very good things. But government intervention in the free-market mechanism for allocating economic resources is purely and simply counterproductive. The free market itself does it best.

We have learned over the years that regulation tends to produce shortages. Witness the Federal Power Commission's fiasco with natural gas over the past 20 years. The result is just what we and others said all along it would be: a severe, growing, government-made shortage of this fuel.

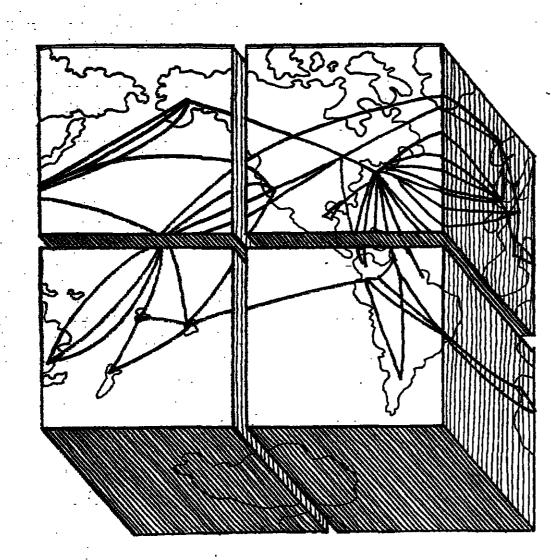

Despite this hard experience, the emergence of any new shortage almost invariably brings cries for government regulation of one sort or another. Unfortunately, this is likely to worsen the very shortage it is instituted to remedy.

The problem is that "regulation" is an emotionally loaded word. To many it connotes some sort of fairness, a shield against exploitation, in the interest of the ordinary citizen. It therefore makes a great platform for politicians. If patriotism is the last refuge of a scoundrel, as Dr. Johnson pointed out two centuries ago, then regulation may be the first resort of a demagogue.

It's wondrous to observe how politicians can get away with continuing to prescribe the very medicine that gave the patient the disease in the first place.

We as a people should be mature enough by now to base our approach to any thought of additional regulation squarely on what experience shows us the results of regulation are really likely to be. Not on the sort of wishful thinking that has too often prevailed in the past.

Danish Tax Increase Would Curb Imports

COPENHAGEN, May 8 (AP). - The Danish government today proposed a series of tax measures that would have the effect of sharply reducing the country's imports. Some economists said the proposed increase of 10 percent in sales and other indirect taxes might have an effect on imports equal to that expected in Italy under the Rome government's import control program.

Seeking parliament's authority to act immediately. Finance Minister Anders Andersen predicted a "massive effect" on imports of cars and, indirectly, on imports of oil and oil products. The proposals would immediately make a car 25 percent more expensive to buy. Mr. Andersen noted that the nation's balance of

U.K. Oil Deposits Seen Larger Than Forecast

LONDON, May 8 (AP-DJ) .-"Substantial" improvements on estimates of Britain's North Sea oil and gas reserves will be contained in a report to be made to the government shortly. Lord Balogh, Minister of State for Energy, said today. "This country should be more or less self-sufficient in energy from the late 1970s onward," he told the House of Lords.

British Petroleum Co. recently estimated that oil output from the British sector of the North Sea could possibly reach five million barrels a day by 1984. That would be two and a half times Britain's present consump-

Italy, Russia Sign Barter Accord on Oil

Sources Report Deal Is Worth $957 Million

ROME, May 8 (AP-DJ).-Italy's hydrocarbons agency has signed an agreement to supply the Soviet Union with six petrochemical factories and approximately 24 heavy-duty gas pumping stations, the state-owned group announced today.

Officials at the agency, Ente Nazionale Idrocarburi (ENI), declined to put a value on the contract, but industrial sources said it could reach more than 600 billion lire (about $957 mil-

This would be twice the size of the largest previous such con-tracts, with Fiat for the auto factory at Toghattigrad and with Montedison for a series of chemical plants.

The pact, signed with the Soviet Ministry of Foreign Trade, is a barter arrangement. ENI will be paid mostly in crude oil, natural gas and products of the petrochemical plants.

However, industrial sources close to ENI said this did not imply that Soviet sales of crude and natural gas to Italy would increase. These sources believe that the Soviet Union needs these raw materials too much itself to sell them to the West.

The plants, to be built by ENI's Snam Progetti division, are to produce ammonia, urea methanol, ethylene, and ethyl oxides. Their location has not yet been decided.

A large share of production will be sold back to Anic, which is 70.4 percent controlled by ENI. No indication was given of the capacity of the plants.

Danish Move Shocks EEC. New Blow to Unity Is Seen

The European commission was have been as censorious about shocked today to learn that the the Italians as the other minthe introduction of heavy taxes on the importation of cars and consumer durables.

These proposals were put forward in the Danish parliament less than twenty-four hours after the European Economic Community finance and agriculture ministers had failed to agree here on a united response to the 50 percent deposit scheme on imports imposed by the Italian government.

Both ministerial meetings struggled hard last night to find a community consensus on how the other eight EEC member countries should reply to what they regarded as a direct assault by the Italians on EEC prin-ciples. But the main purpose of yesterday's meetings was to find a way of preventing the Italian measures from setting a precedent which could be used as an excuse by other EEC member nations which also have critical balanceof-payments difficulties.

As with the Italian measures the community has no alterna-tive but to accept what the Danish government proposes. Technically speaking, the Danish government has to ask EEC "permission," but in practice there is no way in which the community can prevent the Danish move. U.K. Vehicle Output Recovers

British vehicle production has made an almost complete recovery from the effects of the three-day working week during April, figures from the Department of Industry show. Car output totaled 122,000, only 3 percent down in the corresponding month last year. Production of commercial vehicles amounted to 28,000, about 7 percent tower than the year-ago figures. However, the sensonally-adjusted figures do not show such an optimistic picture. In normal circumstances, production last month should have been rather higher than it was. But considering the shortages of raw materials, especially of steel, recovery from the emergency appears to be going quite well, the department says.

Eastern Expects First-Half Profit Eastern Air Lines chairman Floyd Hall expects the company to report a first-half profit but declines to predict a profit for the full year because of steadily rising jet fuel prices. In 1973's first half, the company reported a loss of 47 cents per share. The airline made $4.7 million in profits in both March and April and now has a profit in the four months of about $7 million. Mr. Hall also says he doubts that the airlines will seek additional fare bikes following the 6 percent domestic increase approved by the Civil Aeronautics Board last month. The industry is concerned that it is "bumping the

Clyde Shipyards Fear State Takeover

Just as Industry's Prospects Brighten

By Terry Robards

PORT GLASGOW, Scotland. (NYT) .-- The threat of a government takeover has suddenly emeged for the nation's oldest heavy industry—the yards on the River Clyde here that built the ships with which Britain once ruled the waves.

If it happens, nationalization will come just as prospects for the shipbuilding industry are brightening, because of the huge quan-titles of oil that have been discovered in the North Sea.

"We have imponderables hanging over us-like nationalization," said Ross Belch, managing director of Scott Lithgow Ltd., one of the few remaining shipbuilding companies with a full order book and a bright future if it could remain under private control.

"If this government wins a majority in the next election," he said recently, "we are pretty close to the top of the list. We don't know what form nationalization will take, but it never solved the problems of any industry."

Last week, at a private meeting in London, the new Labor government is said to have told the shipbuilders that escaping nationalization was out of the question, assuming the Labor party wins a solid majority in the election that almost everybody assumes will occur within the next six months.

At present, the government commands a minority of House of Commons votes, which would prevent it from pushing through legislation as controversial as nationalization of shipbuilding.

Although details of the London meeting are sketchy, it reportedly took place with Anthony Wedg-wood Benn, the new Secretary of State of Industry, whose pronationalization leanings are well known. Here in Port Glasgow, about 20 miles from Glasgow in eastern Scotland, the assumption is being made that nationalization is on the way.

Although they still talk about the launching of the Queen Mary here in 1935, the halcyon days of the Scottish yards are past. Japan and other countries have taken over as the world leaders in shipbuilding. One of the motives for nationalization is to prevent a further decline of the industry in Britain. Ironically, the people here seem to feel the outlook for business harbor for dry at Harvien. is fairly good, many new kinds of vessels being required for offshore exploration and development. The shippards are adjusting to these new demands.

Scott Lithgow, for example, has traditionally built warships, suomarines, trawlers, bulk cargo carriers and, more recently giant oil tankers. Now it has $50 million in orders for ships directly related to oil exploration and servicing.

The government has not made clear what its plans for the shipbuilding industry would be under nationalization, so Scott Lithgow and its competitors will continue to turn out ships but will not be adding to their capacities or planning for the longer-term future.

The company said its price increases are consistent with commitments made to the Cost of Living Council last December. Ford committed itself, along with General Motors and American Motors, not to increase 1974 model prices again "unless forced to by unforeseen major economic events—such as cost increases substantially those projected for the balance of the model year."

Mr. Dunlop called Ford's pro-pored price increase "unwarrant-ed," and said it violates the agreement with the Cost of Living Council to avoid further price rises this year. Chrysler, which boosted its prices last week, was not part of the pact with the cost council. Ford said that unit costs since November have increased at an average rate of $36 each month, amounting to a total of $214 a

In Miami, Dow Chemical officials told the annual meeting that the company will "massively increase the prices" of its products this year because it is experiencing much higher costs.

For business in Spain, come to London

To 38 Lombard Street, to be precise.

Banco de Santander, one of Spain's largest banks, has just opened its most important overseas branch there.

The new branch completes an international network covering Europe and Latin America and offers a full banking service from current account facilities to foreign exchange and import/export finance. The bank now has branches in more countries of the European Economic Community than any other Spanish bank.

If you are considering doing business with Spain—one of Europe's strongest economies—or with Latin America, come and talk to us.

We think there is no one in London who could help you more.

LOR a few months after his life," writes Mr. Stegner, "was the graduation in 1914 from high school in Ogden, Utah, Bernard DeVoto worked as a reporter on the newspaper there "Later on," writes Wallace Stegner in this discreet, sympathetic and consistently interesting biography, warring with the effete and literary in New York, he would belligerently assert his price in being a 'mere' journalist."

DeVoto's belligerence

legendary, but although he had been an Army rifle instructor in World War I and knew how to throw a punch, he restricted himself to the intellectual's preferred weapons, the tongue for close combat and the typewriter at longer range.

His competence included the expert journalist's willingness to follow where the facts led, ingrained skepticism and the ability to write vivid, straight-forward prose, but went far beyond these skills.

"Across the Wide Missouri," his chronicle of the fur trade, published in 1947, won both the Pulitzer and Bancroft Prizes for history. The awards could just as well have gone to his other major works, "The Year of Decision: 1846," which dealt with the young nation's march to the West. and "The Course of Empire," a study of the Lewis and Clark expedition, DeVoto also wrote the "Easy Chair" column in Harper's Magazine for 20 years until his death in 1955, served as curator of the Mark Twain Papers, rescuing many of them from bowdlerization and suppression, edited the Saturday Review of Literature for two years in the 1930s and wrote scores of magazine articles, the first of which was for H.L. Mencken's Smart Set.

In "Mark Twain's America," published in 1932, his first major scholarly work, DeVoto demolished the accepted view of Twain as a failed novelist, his creativity crushed by the vulgarity and puritanism of Hannibal and the trass gentility of Hartford during with all the restraint of an Apache taking a scalp, DeVoto demonstrated that Van Wyck Brooks, who had developed this thesis, had based many doubtful conclusions on incorrect data. He went on to argue that Twain was precisely what Brooks had said could not have existed at the time—a native American artist of the first rank—and couldn't resist adding, in effect, that the trouble with Brooks and his followers was that they didn't know anything about America west of the Charles.

"One of the things that Benny DeVoto never did learn all his social sense of how much wa enough-how far to go in colla quialism among those who spokonly the stiffest king's Engiret how far to go in profanity among those whose mouths had early been sterilized with soap, how ta to go in familiarity with reserve strangers or friendly women how to state his opinions, which were quick, powerful, and sure without staging them at some one's expense." The altercation with Brook was partly responsible. Mr. Steg ner believes, for the worst disap pointment of DeVoto's career. Phi Beta Kappa graduate o Harvard University, he returned there in the early 1930s to teach part-time and to edit the alumn magazine, which he characteris-tically transformed into a liveand disputatious publication

Seeking a permanent appointment in 1936, DeVoto wrote to ar influential friend on the faculty "I'd rather teach at Harvard than do anything else on earth." I was not to be. Honest and guile-less Benny DeVoto proved to be no match for the academic bush whackers and freeze-dried brakmins of Cambridge's drawing rooms. Not only did he fail to ge the post he sought, but also the university made it clear that he had no future there.

Almost as painful to DeVou was his failure as a novelic While working on his first, shortly after his graduation from Har-vard, he suffered a nervou breakdown For the rest of hi life he suffered from psychosomatic allments and from period of deep depression and panic the resisted psychotherapy, He came closest with "We Accept With Pleasure," set in the Cambridge of the late 1920s, and Mr. Stegner suggests that if he had followed his own excellent advice to his students at the Bread Loaf Writers' Conference, putting it through his typewriter again, he might well have socceeded

Not until the late 1940s did Devoto abandon the novel From his hitter experience he produced one of his most notable works "The World of Fiction," an eloquent and accurate examination of the process of creation and the relation between the writer and the reader.

Mr. Stegner, 2 distinguished novelist and historian himself and a member of "the Tribe of Benny," as DeVoto's friends called themselves, from 1939 onwards is at his best when discussing thi aspect of DeVoto's career.

"He looked upon incureds-throughout his life as his own peculiar and malevolent enemy not to be succumbed to to be fought and exorcised," he writes "Controversy, fiction, friendship alcohol, work, even his need fo institutional justification and af filiation, had all been invoke tactics in his effort to die sant. BRIDGE.

AS PALMAS. Canary Islands, May 8 (NYT).—American teams finished one-two in both sections of the mixed team qualifying contest in the bridge Olympiad here vesterday afternoon. A neck-and-neck race for the fourth qualifying position in one of the sections resulted in a four-way tie.

The black-section qualifiers for the final to be played Friday and Saturday were: Joe Morse of Silver Spring, Md., 122; Mike Cappelletti of Washington, D.C., 115; Tony Trad of Switzerl d. 111; Bengt Nygren of Sweden, 110. Two other American teams just failed to qualify, although their scores would have been sufficient in the other section. Alvin Roth of New York and Peter Pender of San Francisco were tied for 7th with 107.

In the red section there were three clear-cut qualifiers: Waldemar Von Zedtwitz of New York, 122, and Tubby Stayman of New York who tied with Renato Mondolfo of Italy, 113. Winning the tie-breaker between five teams for the fourth position was Jack Kennedy of Shreveport, La., giving the United States five teams in the final. The unlucky three teams who were tied with Kennedy at 104 but lost the tie break were those led by Orlando Capos of India, Lorenzo Runeberg of Finland, and G.C.H. Fox of London.

The New York team headed by Alvin Roth and including Barbara Rappaport, Bill and Marietta Passell, and Michael and Gall Moss, pulled into contention on Monday. In an exciting sixthround match, the Passells played a remarkable deal, shown in the diagram.

Bruins Ahead, 1-0

BOSTON, May 8 (UPI).—Bobby Our scored on a 40-foot shot with only 22 seconds left to play to give the Boston Bruins a 3-2 victory over the Philadelphia Plyers last night in the opening game of the National Hockey Langue Stanley Cup best-of-seven grine finals. Just when it seemed that the game was going into overtime after Philadelphia had overcome a 2-0 deficit, Ken Hodge took the puck deep in Flyer territory and placed a perfect pass onto the stick of Orr. The Bruin defense-man let fly and the puck just whized past bewildered goalie Bernie Parent. It was only Orr's second goal in 11 playoff games. The Flyers, playing with only one day of rest after a hard semi-tinal series against New York, missed a superb opportunity to break the 2-2 tile with 55 seconds left in the game as Bobby Clarke threaded his way through the Boston defense and gave the puck to Bill Flett. But Flett, after faking goalie Gilles Gilbert out of the net, had the puck roll off

Clarke had given Philadelphia a 2-2 tie after 5 minutes 32 seconds of the third period as he took his rebound and lifted it over the fallen Gilbert.

A power-play goal, by Wayne Cashman at 12:08 of the opening period and Gregg Sheppard's 10th goal in 11 playoff games, just 53 seconds later, lifted the Bruins into a 2-0 lead.

But Orest Kindrachuk put Philadelphia on the scoreboard at 7:47 of the second period when he poked in a rebound of a Joe Watson shot.

The Bruins, who won the Stanley Cup in 1970 and 1972, will have the home ice advantage once again tomorrow night for game

two. "We stopped skating after we got 2 2-0 lead," said the Bruins' coach, Armando (Bep) Guidelin, after the game, "When the Flyers came back to tie us, I thought sure it would go into overtime. Our long layoff was showing.

But then Hodgie and Espo (Phil Esposito) and Wayne Cashman realized what was happening and started to work. That's what did it, hard work."

As if in awe of their press notices, which had advertised mayhem by the Philadelphians and brutal battering by the Bostonians, neither team resorted to the hard checking and flying elbows that had been expected. Instead, they worked on crisp passing and puck-hawking in testing the goalles.

Kenya Breaks British Links

NAIROBI, May 8 (Reuters),-Kenya today broke off sports relations with Britain because British Lions rugby team. Isaac Lugonzo, chairman of the Kenyan National Sports Council, said that the decision came because the Lions had ignored the ruling of the Supreme Council for Sports in Africa and the advice of the British government. The Supreme Council met last month and called on all African countries to impose a sports boy-cott on Britain if the rugby tour of South Africa took place. The Lions team arrived in South Africa yesterday.

E. Germans Win Soccer Cup Final

ROTTERDAM, May & (Reuters) _Magdeburg emphasized East Germany's emergence as a coming soccer power when it won the European Cup Winners Cup from AC Milan of Italy, the defending champs.

The young German team won 2-0 in a game attended by only 5.000 spectators in the huge Ferencord Stadium here. Milan, the heavy favorites, had won the trophy twice in the last seven years and were vastly more experienced in big-time soccer than their East European opponents.

Magdeburg's triumph was aided by its brilliant 19-year-old leftwinger. Martin Hoffmann, who set up both goals.

By Roger Bannister

At the time of the first 4minute mile, I remember echoing Louis XIV's remark, "Après moi le déluge," and what a deluge it has been! Though 4-minute miles are now so frequent that I have to ask my statistical friends for the latest figures, I know that it still requires great dedication to training.

The task of running the first 4-minute mile was mainly, of course, the overcoming of a psychological problem, the fear of an apparent barrier, which had left runners teetering on the brink for eight years without improvement in the world record. Now it is merely a physical—or at any rate, a physiological -problem of how the lungs and heart of runners can be suffi-ciently trained to transport more efficiently the oxygen needed by the hungry muscles. Running remains the simplest of sports which, despite its relatively few participants, gives it a great popular appeal. It is, in fact, technically just putting one foot after another. In simplicity, it rivals our great naional game of soccer. Recently I read that this year's Boston Marathon had more than 700 competitors, including a lady athlete who had the temerity to complete the distance in some 2 hours 47 minutes, a time that all except highly-trained men would find difficult. A few years ago, attempts were made to stop the first lady from running in this race, but thankfully, her husband, who happened to be a judo expert, went along on a bicycle and protected her from overzealous officials who tried to stop her. Another giant stride women's liberation! How cheering that even in a rich and mechanical society there is still a craving for challenge.

Physical Advances

There are many reasons for the continued progress in miling, though, of course, the world record (3:51.1), held by America's Jim Ryun, has not been broken for the last seven years. partly because Ryun is a most exceptional athlete and partly because this record was assisted by altitude training.

The first reason is the exorahle human drive to achieve some individual pinnacle, whether it is running a mile, climbing Everest or sailing round the world. Secondly, more people in more countries want to take part and have the food and money to afford what is, after all, the luxury of sport. How many Kenyans, who have the inherited advantage of altitude acclimatization, had enough opportunity to run 20 years ago? In the next generation we shall see China emerging on the international sports scene.

Third, there are scientific advances in training routines. using the interval training method to improve oxygen uptake, using altitude training and. perish the thought, even such horrible suggestions of removing and later transfusing back some of the runner's own blood. The problem here is to prevent science or other disruptive influences, including those of In the opener, Seaver took a drugs, advertising and politics 3-1 lead into the eighth inning from distorting what is, in essence, a pure and simple activity by opening a kind of Pandora's box of knowledge.

Team Tennis Still Draws As a Novelty

PARIS, May 8.-World Team Tennis began to spread across North America yesterday and the novelty brought out respectable crowds to New York, Pittsburgh, Toronto and Denger, After 10,000 had attended WTT's opening in Philadelphia Monday night, 8,108 spectators came to a Pittsburgh arena last night. And once again. Billie Jean King led her team to victory as the Philadelphia Freedonis defeated the Pittsburgh Triangles, 30-25, King beat Evenue Goolagong twice, first 6-2, then 6-4. Pittsburgh's playercoach Ken Rosewall split with Brian Fairlie, winning 6-2, losing 7-5, while the Triangles' mixed doubles team of Peggy Michel and Vitas Gerulaitis split with Fred Stolle and Julie Anthony. First came a 6-3 victory, then a 6-2 loss.

At Toronto, the Royals, led by player-coach Tom Okker of the Netherlands, won their WTT opener, defeating the Cleveland Nets, 32-21, at Maple Leaf Gardens before 4,458 fans.

Okker easily handled Cleveland's Cliff Richie, winning twice, 6-1 and 6-2, At Uniondale, N.Y., Ross Case ron both his singles matches. leading the Hawaii Leis to a 29-25 victory over the New York Sets. A crowd of 4,999 at the Nassau Coliseum saw Case beat player-coach Manual Santana, 6-4, and then defeat Charlie Owens, 6-3. Val Ziegenfus scored Hawaii's other singles victory, defeating Pam Teeguarden, 6-4. At Denver the Chicago Aces opened their season with a 33-32 victory over the Denver Racquets as both teams won three sets during the match. The turning point came in the match's four sets of women's singles when Sue Stap of Chicago won the first four games against Denver's Françoise Durr, who was replacto innocent, whole-hearted recre-ational pursuits, thus giving a score 4-1 in favor of Stap. Stap went on to win the set 6-4.

WTT Scoring Doesn't Win The Players Tradition Spurned By New System By Bill Grimsley

DALLAS, May 8 (AP) -A long. rough road ahead for World Team Tennts is seen by the leading professionals. gathered here for tonight's slart of the World Championship Ten-

The biggest drawback, most of them agree, hes in the revolu-tionary scoring which scorns tradition and applies a simplified cumulative-scoring method. "I don't like the scoring at all."

said The Nastace, the world's No. 1 ranking pro. "I think WTT should retain the normal scoring system. I will wait to make judgment on the rest of it." "It appears they are trying to cultivate a whole new body of fans," said Tom Gorman, the ninth-place alternate here in the field of eight finalists. "I think there is great danger of turning off most of the old, established fans. But they may be able to draw from the basketball, baseball and bockey crowds." The new team tennis concept made its debut in Philadelphia

Monday night with a carnival atmosphere of bands, balloops, Billie Jean King and Evonne Goolagong, drawing 10.611 fans. Now that the bloom is off, it will be interesting to see how other matches draw," said Rod

Laver meets defending cham-pion Stan Smith in the opening match at Moody Coliseum tonight, and then John Newcombe meets Tom Okker. In the other first-round matches, on Thursday, Nastase plays Wimbledon titleholder Jan Kodes and Arthur Ashe opposes 17-year-old Bjorn Borg of Sweden. The eight players qualified for this event in a series of WCT tournaments. The first prize here $50,000.

Of the lineup here, only Newcombe and Okher have signed to play in the WTT. Newcombe is with Houston and Okker with Toronto, Okker played in Canada last night, then flew overnight for his match tonight. "That gives you an example of the demands of the WTT schedule." said Mike Davies, director of WCT. "You can imagine how tired some of these guvs will be by Wimbledon time." Team tennis, as contrasted with WCT, has adopted a 1-2-3-4 scoring system, replacing the "love-15-deuce" style and has put emphasis on team rather than individual scoring.

"I don't like that," said Kodes. "Scoring should be the same as always. "I don't mind innovations." said Ashe, "They may be good for the game. The reason I don't sign up for WTT is that I didn't like the prospect of possibly playing before 30 people."

"I may join the WIT next year," added Borg, "but the scoring-ugh—I don't like it."

"If the scoring doesn't work out," said Newcombe, "I think our commissioner, George Mac-Call, will change it.

just wait and see."
"We are just getting the wrinkles out of WCT." said Smith. "Still, guys complain. You can imagine the beefing there will be in WTT."

munity can choose its own fire-fighting equipment, and the government does not dictate what type of trucks they should order. If a community wants a hook and ladder, they can order a hook and ladder. If they decide they'd rather have a pumper, it's their option.

P-So while I'm reading the speech the fire in the basement is going full blast?

B-Right. Now, for safety, what we ought to do is have you present each fireman with a scroll expressing the gratitude of every man, woman and child in this nation for the wonder-ful work they are doing. You could personally sign each one in front of them. This should give us enough time to burn up every tape you ever made.

Revising U.S. History On Role of Minorities

By Agis Salpukas

DETROIT (NTT).—An imaginary argument between a black father and his son is how a new textbook called "Promise of America," by Lerry Cuban and Philip Roden, begins a chapter on the civil rights movement. It illustrates the dramatic change in the way blacks are being portrayed in some children's text-books throughout the nation and the new emphasis on the contributions of racial and ethnic groups to American history.

In another section a worker from Lithuania, whose job it was to clean up the blood all day in the Chicago stockyards of 1904, gives a firsthand account of what it was like there. A reporter conducts an imaginary interview with Alexander H. Stephens, Vice-President of the Confederate States, a friend of Abraham Lincoln's and a senator from Georgia, on the causes of the Civil War.

To give a sense of life in the cities, the sheet music of the popular hit "Downtown" is reproduced. And the pages are filled with graphics, often hard-hitting, such as one showing Japanese residents of Hiroshima waiting for medical help shortly after the explosion of the atomic bomb

For someone who was graduated from high school as recently as five years ago, some of the new textbooks bear little resemblance to the books of the past, in which American history usually began with Christopher Columbus and then focused on the colonies and the movement West.

Then, in 1966, the Michigan State Legislature passed a law directing the state's Department of Education to help school districts select textbooks that took a fresh look at the impact of racial and ethnic groups on American history.

The law also called for surveys of the most widely used textbooks and four surveys made so far have sharply affected the nation's textbook publishing industry.

The first survey, in 1968, found that no book treated minority groups adequately. A survey in 1971 found progress but concluded that minorities were either largely neglected or treated as appendages and not as an integral part of the narrative. In 1972, a survey rated 31 percent of the books as good or very good, but there were still serious drawbacks in the best of them. Some still portrayed American history mostly in terms of hardy pioneers building an ever more prosperous nation through science, technology and hard work The fourth report, in 1974, concluded that half of the 18 reviewed books were excellent or good and another 20 percent

Most books now include events largely avoided 10 years ago, such as the internment of Japanese-Americans in camps during World War II and the slave rebellion in 1831 led by Nat Turner, a slave preacher.

The women's movement is included in many, and some books discuss such previous tabooed issues as abortion and birth

The most concerted pressure on textbook publishers is coming from the women's movement. In discussing the "Impact of Our Past: A History of the United States," by Bernard A. Weisberger, one reviewer in the 1974 study wrote that the author "presents women in a range

"Not only will the student read of the garment workers and pacifists," the reviewer wrote, "but he/she will see a photograph of Frances Perkins shaking hands with some

Other groups, such as Chicanos and Puerto Ricans, are beginning to ask school authorities and publishers for more adequate treatment.

New textbook depicts the sorrow of slaves.

Elizabeth Connor, supervisor of social studies in the Detroit school system, summed up in an interview the treatment of immigrant groups in most books as follows: "They pass through Ellis Island. They settle in the city and have a hard time, and that's about it."

Ethnic groups, she said, are now asking: "Who manned the steel mills? Who worked the mines? Who cut the forests?" There has been a vast improvement in the portrayal of blacks, she said, and their agitation has subsided.

But recently there has been a counterreaction, Small groups of parents, particularly in suburban districts, are contending that some of the newer texts have gone too far—emphasizing the problems of the United States and playing down the accom-

Parents in the Warren district, a large, white, mostly bluecollar suburb of Detroit, succeeded last May in having the school board withdraw "Promise of America."

The book, broken down into five volumes, presents American history in terms of broad themes, such as the growth of the city. Rather than the standard narrative, where famous men are the prime movers, the emphasis is on the everyday life of ordinary people in the cities and on the farms.

There are numerous excerpts from contemporary accounts. A chapter on "Getting Along in the City" includes excerpts from a novel about Chicago Jews in the 1920s and a short story by James T. Farrell describing life on Chicago's South

In the Farrell story, Tony Rabuski, a Polish boy, is described as follows: "He talked about the 'niggers.' He felt as good as he guessed these other kids did when he talked about the 'niggers' and they could be beat up."

To Mrs. Carolyn Gietzen, one of the 27 parents who agitated to have the board remove the book, such passages were damaging to white children and degrading to blacks. "Education is getting a positive self-image about oneself." she said in an interview at a school board meeting recently.

"No child, white or black, will get a positive image by reading about stabbings, war, the problems." "For me," she continued, "our history is still made up of heroes and heroines, but when you look at these books, there are no heroes and heroines." So far, the opposition of parents such as those in Warren has not blunted the trend toward revision.

BUSINESS OPPORTUNITIES ASK THE MONET MAKERS HOW THEY MAKE MONEY

If you've spent years losing money in the stock market, you owe it to yourself to ask. NOW COMMODITY OPTIONS WORK Atlaimum investment $5,000.00.

 How it is possible to achieve a net profit of 20% or more, or more times each year. 2 Investors have been really sur-prised at the beginning of this year in just two of the unajor commodities, such as cocca and silver which have given an ap-proximate yield of nearly 300%. Do you think it is still possible for the market to give you 2007 twice or many times more in the coming months?

Why this approach riminates the need for market "timing." How can you determine the full amount of risk ahead of time without limiting your profit potential. .C.O. (U.K.) Ltd., 40 Euckingham Palace Rd., London, S.W.L. Telephone: $25,7668
